CLOISTER WINS NATIONAL "AWARD"

MARK TWAIN first saw the light of a Missouri day November 30, 1835. Buffalo has a good claim on Mark Twain alongside Hannibal, Elmira, Hartford and New York City as a place where, for however short a time, the celebrated humorist worked, suffered, joked, unstuffed stuffed shirts, and exploded all sham balloons that floated his way. He came to Buffalo, Saturday, August 14, 1869 to run the Express for J. N. Larned, George H. Selkirk, himself and others who had bought out the Clapp Brothers and Thomas Kennett. The staff gave him a dinner that night and Monday he got down to business. His Buffalo sojourn ended in April 1871, when sorely tried by a winter of sickness and death in his family, he gave up his interest in the Express — in fact, gave up newspaper work altogether.

It has been said frequently that on the whole, Mark Twain's two years in Buffalo did not leave a favorable impression in the humorist's mind. There was nothing about the City which made him unhappy here, but the constant misfortune which overtook his family. Mr. Langdon, the father of his bride, Olivia Langdon died in 1870.

Also that summer, a friend of Mrs. Clemens came to visit them at 472 Delaware Avenue and was stricken with typhoid fever. The friend died in the Twain house about six weeks after Mr. Langdon died in Elmira. Another death, that of a Washington newspaperman named Riley, with whom Twain was going to write a book, occurred a month after the friend of Mrs. Clemens died. But the greatest disaster which came to him and his family came two weeks later when his first child was prematurely born.

Mrs. Clemens, exhausted by the tragedies of the previous four months, almost died from the shock. He sold out his share of the Express in April 1871 and went to Elmira to re-order his life.

Olivia "Langdon" Clemens, daughter of Jarvis Langdon, Elmira's "Coal King." A ship-board acquaintance between Charley Langdon, brother of Olivia, and Samuel L. Clemens, aboard a trans-Atlantic Steamer, the "Quaker City," eventually led to a formal introduction to Olivia and her marriage to "Mark Twain." He epitomized his love idyll with the loveliest, the gentlest and the kindest person he had ever met with these words: "Where-soever she was, there was Eden."

SHOWDOWN

Restauranters from all parts of the country express disbelief when they hear of the Cloister's "cocktail policy" which offers the discerning inbibers well-sized portions at drop-in-the-bucket prices. The secret, according to James D. DiLapo, proprietor and Bon Vivant of Paris, London and Rio de Janeiro, is in the good will it creates, in increased patronage, and in the ever-growing number of one-timers who become regular patrons.

While guests indulge in many favorites—Old Fashioneds, Rob Roys, Manhattans, Daiquiris, Whiskey Sours — the most called-for concoction prepared by our talented mixologists, is the Martini with our special rust inhibitor.

Our correspondent also states it is only fair to warn any would-be ruffians that Wild Bill can with his six-gun, drive a cork into a bottle without shattering the glass.

YOUR CLOISTER

STEAK AND PRIME RIB

The Cloister beef is aged — under precise temperature and humidity controls — for three weeks. Aging brings our beef to peak flavor and at the same time, exerts a natural tenderizing action. When beef is aged "naturally" by simple exposure to air, it tends to dry out, lose much of its juiciness and "eat" less well.

In order to maintain the advantages of aging, without incurring any of these hazards, Cloister beef undergoes special "CRYOVAC" processing. The steak strips and prime ribs are placed into sturdy plastic bags from which the air is withdrawn under pressure. The vacuum thus created causes the plastic container to form a skin-tight envelope around the beef. The end result is perfectly aged steak brought to maturity without loss of flavor or succulence.

By the time it is served to you, hot and sizzling from our charcoal broilers, there isn't a nibble of a doubt that your Cloister steak will constitute a memorable experience in delightful dining.

472 DELAWARE AVENUE, Mark Twain's Buffalo residence, to which he brought his bride, Olivia Langdon of Elmira. The mansion stood on the west side of Delaware Avenue, just north of Virginia Street. Friends liked to recall the time Mark Twain moved with his wife, Olivia, to their home at 472 Delaware Avenue. Mark Twain didn't know a great deal about Buffalo real estate so he commissioned Mr. Slee of Elmira to find him a modest boarding place. Mr. Slee said he would make the search forthwith and Mark Twain accordingly forgot about the whole matter until the afternoon of February 3rd, 1870 when he came from Elmira with his bride. The couple was met at the station and then slowly and aimlessly driven to 472 Delaware Avenue where Mark Twain soon was to be flabbergasted by the announcement that the "modest lodgings" he had asked for was this fine house and that it was the present of Mr. Langdon to his daughter and son-in-law. When Mark Twain regained his composure he remarked to Mr. Langdon, "Whenever you are in Buffalo, if it's twice a year, come right here. Bring your bag and stay overnight, if you want to. It shan't cost you a cent."

Our sincere apologies to Sir Jonathan Christopher the Third, shown here in the depths of despair in the "Cloister" foyer, when he was unable to secure a table for his friend and confidante, the Earl of Tristan, at Buffalo's fabled restaurant. This would never have happened had he listened to our oft repeated advice to use our pony rider reservations, number 886-0070, stationed at all of the City's leading hostleries and railroad depots.

Citizens Vigilante Committee Holds Meeting At The "CLOISTER"

"A call for action" was the keynote at a meeting held last evening at the Cloister, presided over by Herbert Bluenose. The subject was Canal Street which in the opinion all those present, equals in wickedness, sin and depravity, the ill-famed Barbary Coast of San Francisco and the French Quarter of New Orleans. Our staff policies prevent us from printing the sordid details of the "Palaces of Pleasure" which abound in the district. We vow we will never offend the tender sensibilities of our lady readers but suffice to say that a secret plan of action was agreed upon which in our opinion will eradicate this blot on the fair name of our city. After the meeting all present adjourned to the "Cloister" living room to thoroughly enjoy the six-ounce cocktails so expertly prepared at this famous restaurant.

How your Favorite Liquor got its Name

Tale of the Cocktails

how it got its name

In a burst of patriotism, barmaid Betsy Flannagan once served Washington's officers a special drink made from rum, rye and fruit juices. .. decorated by the tail feathers from a Tory neighbor's plump rooster. Inspired, a French soldier in the group declared a toast: "Vive le Cog's tail!" Thus a legend began.

New Orleans version: An early apothecary on the waterfront served liquor to sailors in "coquetiers" or eggcups.

(There are many legends of the cocktail—and other drinks as well. In fact, there are SO many, we can offer here only a few of the fascinating, contradictory tales!)

MANHATTAN

In Maryland, in 1846, a local bartender rushed a drink to a wounded duelist. He filled a stemmed glass half full of rye, syrup and bitters. The drink grew popular, and vermouth was added, in "Gay 90's" New York where it became known as the "Manhattan."

MARTINI

This drink was first made at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, in the "Gay 90's." And it was named after a Mr. Martinez of New Orleans for whom it was made.

HIGHBALL

St. Louis, 1880's: Early railroaders used a ball on a high pole to signal an engineer to speed up. This was called a highball. The trainmen, always on a fast schedule, only had time to have a quick drink . . . which usually was whiskey and water. They named it the "highball."

OLD-FASHIONED

One of America's oldest, this cocktail was created on Kentucky Derby Day at Louisville's Pendennis Club. The "mix" has changed many times. Fruit was added during Prohibition, to hide the taste of that era's poor liquor.

Exterior Of The Cloister

THE CLOISTER welcomes you to a story book journey back into the elegant era of the gay and fascinating "Nineties" with its days of lavish living, courtly manners and romantic history. Your first approach to the Cloister is one of subdued amazement and enchantment at the vision of the exterior with its ancient brick walls and antique iron grills lighted by gas lamps that once graced the boulevards of old Baltimore. Here you will dine in an atmosphere of quietness and leisurely enjoyment only a few steps from the hustle and bustle of downtown Buffalo and within the walls of the honeymoon home once occupied by Samuel Clemens, world famous as "Mark Twain" and his lovely bride, Olivia Louisa, in the year 1870. The Cloister has been completely and lavishly restored to its former place of beauty. Its furnishings provide an authentic air of elegance emphasized by the beautiful century old patina of the original brick walls. . . .

May we have the privilege of taking you on a tour through our "home" as you prepare to enter . . .

The Cloister is a lovely structure of century-old hand made bricks, with wrought iron galleries against great slabs of stone all salvaged from the original Mark Twain Home, and nestled in a matchless setting of elm, sycamore and poplar trees, climbing ivy, banks of flowers and fine boxwood. As you prepare to enter, your first impression is the modernistic fountain, an original creation by a famed sculptress designed to contrast the new with the old. The outward atmosphere is an introduction to a bygone era emphasized even more by the interior with authentic furnishings for you to enjoy to the fullest. The ancient door studded with hand-wrought Spanish Clavos and its intricate hand cast brass handles is your passport to the world of make believe. The foyer, with its old ship lantern, and its exquisite leaded glass walls, is decorated with theatrical posters of long ago. Here you walk on hand made tiles from Mexico combined with planking salvaged from the original building. To the romanticist it is pleasant to imagine that you are for a moment transplanted to the fabulous era of Mark Twain and his contemporaries. The sunken living room to your right is built in the basement of the original home erected in 1811 and the old foundations still remain, now covered with love seats along its walls. The vaulted beamed ceiling is traditional of the Cloisters which were known for centuries as places where men might meet and enjoy the undisturbed fellowship of good companions. To your left is our companion lounge with its century-old hand carved oak fireplace exquisitely furnished to put you in a mood of relaxation and contentment so you may more fully enjoy the gourmet foods our staff will prepare and serve to you.

The Cloister Green House

Look about you as you dine . . . enjoy the brilliant colors and designs of the Tiffany Chandeliers hung in the dining room which formerly was the carriage house and stables, the conservatory of glass with its outside gardens centered around an old wine press and exquisite stone statuary imported from the capitals of Europe. When darkness falls there is a gradual transformation of these rooms into a fairyland of soft colors and enchantment.

The rear exit is marked by a globe which for years was a part of the old Buffalo Library, the crank handled telephone dated 1903 and the four blade circulating ceiling fans from the back hills of Arkansas. The unusual hand-carved furniture from Old Mexico graces the dining rooms and living room lounges. The century old techniques employed in its making have remained unchanged since the conquest of Mexico by the great Spanish Conquistador Hernando Cortes. Imperfections resulting from these primitive methods are hallmarks of authenticity and the painting technique used originated during the Renaissance. No two pieces are identical and each is an individually made work of art by descendants of the Aztec and Toltec Indians of Mexico. Our staff would consider it a privilege to escort you through a veritable museum which includes an ancient sea chest dating back to the golden age of Spain and Christopher Columbus.

In the Cloister, romance and reminiscences linger with treasures of yesteryear combined with the art of dining which consist of many things: subtle things such as the snowy whiteness of napery, the gleam of polished silver, the sparkle of glassware, the soft romantic music and the gentle hum of quiet conversation. Here at the Cloister we want your dinner to be an unforgettable ceremony — a ceremony combining the very finest of food, impeccable service and an atmosphere of geniality and friendship so that you will leave us with regret and return to us with anticipation.
